

... what auto writers say about the "PERFECT AUTO"

JENSEN INTERCEPTOR II

(excerpts)

S.F. Sunday Examiner & Chronicle - Oct. 25, 1970

- by Dick Nolan

"The Perfect Auto - I suppose that a motor car does make some kind of statement about its owner, however superficial. The Jensen suggests that the guy is well heeled, imaginative, a touch adventurous but not rash, tasteful, unconventional, young where it counts."

Devon Life - June, 1970 . . . by John Whitell

"Once in a lifetime a motor correspondent finds a car that will make him sell his house, auction his wife and hock his children just so he could own one. I have just discovered such a car and after driving it nothing is sacred any longer, this is the effect the Jensen had on me, it was love at first sight."

The Sunday Express - April 20, 1969 - by Robert Glenton

"It is a lazy, docile purr of a car. Its great Chrysler engine drowns until you want it, its very good power steering and its automatic transmission make it one of the easiest, laziest cars in traffic, and yet one gap, one touch of the throttle, and you are two traffic blocks further along, as politely angelic as an unjustly accused choirboy. The Jensen looks menacing, for it has splendidly powerful lines."

Nottingham Evening Post News - April 2, 1969

- by Jerry Ames

"Cruising in silence at 100 m.p.h. with plenty of power in hand, is one of the features that makes the Jensen Interceptor such a delightful car to take along fast, Continental roads."

- by Sterling Moss

"For all that, the Jensen Interceptor is a magnificent car. It is extraordinarily responsive to the power of its engine, yet there seems little doubt that the driver is always in command."
